Common Questions

What are my obligations as an Army Reservist?

To become trained and employable as a soldier, you are required to complete two courses: the BMQ and DP-1. This involves a part-time commitment during the fall, winter and spring, followed by a minimum of one full-time summer term. Once they are qualified, Army Reserve soldiers are expected to serve approximately one weekend per month and one night per week.

Can I work full-time?

There are opportunities for full-time work both during the summer and year-round. These positions vary in their skill requirements and you must apply for them through your unit. If you decide that you want to pursue the military as a career, you can also transfer to the Regular Force to work full-time.

Will I be sent on operations overseas?

There are opportunities to volunteer for operational deployments, but there is absolutely no obligation to do so.

Will I have to leave the Province?

During your first summer, while taking courses to become a qualified soldier in your chosen trade, you may be required to leave the province.
